Non-Residents and Camp Fires

Non-resident vacationists will not be "barred" by the state's new fish and game laws from camping and hiking in Maine's forest regions, contrary to a belief which has gained circulation in the last few weeks and which has aroused protests from organizations in all sections of the country.

In an opinion delivered here to the Maine Development Commission by Sanford L. Fogg, Deputy Attorney General, the status of campers and hikers will remain unchanged under the new law. This decision relieves non-residents from any obligation to employ guides when tramping and camping in the Big Woods, and clears up a misunderstanding existing from a clause in the new laws relating to building fires on "unorganized or unincorporated townships."

Under the present law, non-residents "while hunting or fishing" must be accompanied by guides if they are to build fires in such sections unless they provide the public camp sites or fire places provided by the Forest Service. No mention is made of campers, who have always used the public camp sites for their fires and have been under no necessity to employ guides.

The proposed law is as follows: "Non-residents shall not enter upon any unorganized townships, except public camp sites maintained by the Maine Forestry Department, during the months of May to December and kindle fires thereon while camping or engaged in fishing or hunting without being in charge of a registered guide."

The inclusion of the word "camping" is believed to be the cause of the present misunderstanding. In effect, the opinion of the Deputy Attorney General is that the status of the non-resident camper and hiker in Maine, as distinguished from that of the hunter and fisherman, will be precisely the same under the proposed law as it is under the present one. The intent of the law governing the use of fire in the Maine woods, he points out, is merely one of forest protection, and the change in phrasing in the proposed measure has resulted only from an effort to simplify the relative section.

The Deputy Attorney General says in part: "I have made a careful examination of the origin and development of this section as it relates to non-residents entering upon 'unorganized townships' in the state to 'camp and kindle fires.' The law was first enacted in 1913 as a part of an act to revise, collate, arrange and consolidate the Inland Fish and Game Laws of the State." In 1917 this law was re-enacted under the title of "An Act to Revise, Collate, Arrange and simplify the Inland Fish and Game Laws of the State." Amendments to the foregoing were made in 1919, 1923 and 1927.

The aforesaid Chapter 331, Public Laws of 1929, was enacted to revise and simplify the "Inland Fish and Game Laws of the State," and from information I have received from those in charge of and most active in said revision, I am satisfied that it was not the intention of the Legislature to change, in any degree, the existing law with reference to non-residents' camping and building fires within the unorganized or unincorporated townships of the State.

Tamarack Talk

THE KINSHIP OF BOOKS

Back on the North road, where the birds make the only audible sounds, and tourists are few, but fine in character, Time gives us opportunity to read and talk of books and nature, and man in his native haunts. Yet occasionally a car stops and one meets the people of the outside world. Not all talk of books, quite true, and often I have wondered if most men and women really are readers. But the other day this thought was reversed, for in my ramblings about the farmhouses to visit and talk, I found that nearly every house had at least one book, not always the Bible either, and with one habitant I found a sudden kinship—the kinship of books.

Strange how one booklover feels a tender spontaneous relation to another who loves books. You feel like talking more with him and you become at once more generous—more at ease with one no longer a stranger. So wherever he is, this lover of books finds and makes friends with all who enjoy books and the talk of them.

I am looking for more of that kind of friends and I hope that those who may chance to read this column and would like to talk of books through this medium will write to me in the future. Perhaps there is one who wishes advice in the selection of reading for himself or for his children. Maybe someone is trying to find the name or author of a particular book. If you have any book problem, write to "TAM."

SUMMER

Sunday, the 21st, the writer, Mrs. Bartlett and Jerry Bartlett had the pleasure of attending the ball game on the Sumner grounds, being taken along by Miss Hilda Burr of Massachusetts in her Ford coupe. She is making her annual visit to Bartlett's.

Well, the visiting team represented several districts from up the line were winners, Peru, Dixfield, Phillips and Oxford. Yes, they trimmed the local boys, but they were a remarkable good bunch of boys, gentlemen everyone of them and good players, showing that they were in fine shape with lots of practice. Our boys, it could plainly be seen, were way off as to practice, though some of them made good plays. Lovell Chandler's ball work was a real scream, with his brother, Vernal, a close second. Vernon Redding pitched the whole game through with ease, and several of the best men the trouble of running to first base and others did well, but were up against a lot of young stuff that were in the best of condition, which is a credit to have visit our community. Oh yes, P. V. Redding was there with his lunch cart and he was kept as busy as a one armed man trying to catch the ground ball at Center fair. There was serving hot drinks, confectionery, ice cream, smokes and oversized hot dogs.

Miss Burr recently exchanged her Ford coupe for this new machine, having driven the Ford twenty-seven thousand miles in three years. Not much mileage, one might say, but when we consider that Miss Burr teaches school in Worcester, Mass., forty weeks in the year, not so bad after all.

The Public Libraries in the Town of Paris

Hamlin Memorial Library, Paris Hill

Public Libraries in Paris

From Oxford Democrat of Mar. 12, 1929

An observing stranger going through the town of Paris, Maine, would probably notice the somewhat unusual library buildings in the different villages of the town. It would also show to a stranger that this is a reading community of people who value their libraries, of which they are very proud.

The library on Paris Hill would probably cause the most comment when its history was told, and the idea of changing a jail to a library, a place of dread and horror to a place of pleasantness and joy, is setting a good example for the world to follow.

In my boyhood days the old jail on Paris Hill with its high picket fence about it served as a solemn warning to all that "the straight and narrow way" was the best road to travel.

Built more than one hundred years ago, with a solid ledge for a foundation, with walls and partitions of solid granite, there was little hope of escape for the unfortunate persons that were obliged to be put there.

While the high picket fence that surrounded the jail kept people from too close communication with the inmates, there were many times when conversation was carried on between the prisoners and people standing outside of the picket fence.

I remember that a young boy of sixteen was once put in the jail for a short time, and I stood at the picket fence talking with him many times, with my face between the pickets, and his pale and boyish face peering through the iron bars that can now be seen guarding the small windows set into the solid granite blocks.

After the moving of the county buildings to South Paris, the old jail was changed into a library, through the generosity of Dr. A. C. Hamlin of Bangor, whose ancestors were among the early settlers of the town, and who was a nephew of Hannibal Hamlin, the Vice President of the United States.

This unique gift coming from so illustrious a family was and always will be appreciated by the inhabitants of the town of Paris. Its influence is far reaching, and the books that were originally given have been constantly added to by wise and generous gifts from many people, so that it has now outgrown its quarters, and it should be enlarged.

If sufficient money could be found for the purpose, it will probably be added to by an extension on the western side, where a magnificent view can be seen. A large room with large plate glass windows overlooking the valley below, and the White Mountains in the distance, would make a library to be proud of, indeed, and one that could not be surpassed for beauty of situation, or historical interest.

The library at West Paris in another unique building, although a very modern one. Built of native stones gathered from near-by fields and pastures, this small building attracts the admiring attention of all that see it.

Built on the style of medieval England, like a tiny stone castle, this gift to the people of West Paris located in the center of the village is much appreciated and patronized.

The late Lewis M. Mann made a provision in his will for the erection of this building, and also left for that purpose the land on which it stands. That the will was fully and generously carried out by his son, Edwin, is shown by the building itself, and it is doubtful if a more appreciated library can be found. It is practically fireproof, and no pains have been spared to have it meet the requirements of the village people.

OXFORD—FORE STREET

Mrs. Cummings in Hospital—Guests at Mrs. Mildred Twitchell's—Fourteen Year Old Farmer.

Mrs. A. D. Cummings submitted to a very critical operation at the C. M. G. Hospital last Friday.

Marjorie Twitchell enjoyed a trip to New Hampshire with friends, Sunday. Mrs. Ellen Richards is at Brunswick with her grandson, Geo. Cummings, for a visit.

Miss Agnes Sanborn of Newton, Mass., is at the Wilson home.

Rev. H. L. Faulkingham of Lawrence, Mass., was an over night guest of Al O. Twitchell, the 13th.

Mrs. and Miss Christina Twitchell recently visited their cottage on Mechanic Falls camp ground.

On the 16th, Mrs. Mildred Twitchell had for guests, Mrs. Henry Marr, Mrs. James Wheeler and two children and Mrs. Ethel Dunbar, all of Oxford. The afternoon was spent raspberrying with splendid results. In fact the bushes are or have been loaded with luscious red raspberries and of late the pasture has been black with pickers from Oxford village, Norway, South Paris and Otisfield and there is more to follow.

Henry Goodbroth of Massachusetts was at Al Twitchell's the 19th.

Mrs. F. C. Twitchell, Mrs. Mildred Twitchell, Miss Mary Twitchell and Master James motored to Lewiston, Norway, the 17th, calling on Mr. and Mrs. E. T. Judkins.

Mr. and Mrs. Wallace Estes of Warren, N. H., called on the Twitchells, Monday, on their way home from Tripp Lake, where they had been visiting their daughter and family, Mr. and Mrs. Oscar Judkins.

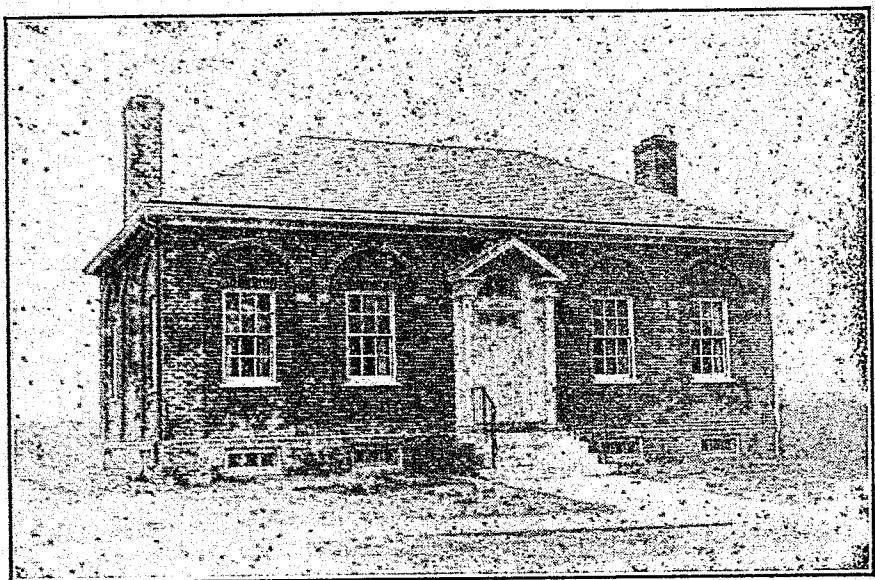

A hen on wheels and not a circus either. "Tis musical, too, goes speeding past here several times, supposedly an advertisement.

Class Lovejoy of Melrose, Mass., who is spending his summer vacation in Maine, principally in Mechanic Falls, is calling on his former neighbors of this town.

Eloise Cummings, who has been in West Paris since June 29th, caring for Dexter Gray, returned home July 18. Mr. Gray having been taken to Lewiston hospital for special treatment and observation.

One of the pleasant early morning sights is three deer that frequently come to graze in fields between Leon and Elmer Twitchell's.

Paris Public Library, South Paris

The South Paris Library

Unlike the library buildings at Paris Hill and West Paris, the library at South Paris was not the gift of one man, or of any group of men.

About twelve years ago it was suggested in a meeting of the Sevens Club, a social and literary organization of young ladies which was formed in 1892, that they should work for the erection of a public library building, and in the meetings of this club and by the efforts of its members that the present library building was started.

At first the money came slowly and as the result of continuous hard work on the part of the members of the club, but after a while the lot on which the building is located was given to the club for that purpose, also the buildings that were on the lot were given, which yielded some revenue as long as the buildings were allowed to stand.

After the fire which damaged the building and the books, where the library was located at that time, it became necessary to find a new and permanent place for the library, and the citizens of the town, both the present and past citizens, responded nobly to the call, and the result is that South Paris people have a very beautiful brick building in the center of the town, with a fund for its maintenance, which with economy will nearly pay the expenses of keeping it open at any time when it is most convenient for the public.

It has a large collection of suitable books, and although the shelves are many and spacious, the time will undoubtedly come when more will have to be added, and the building enlarged, for which suitable care was taken when the plans were made.

To all of the three libraries mentioned many of the books are gifts, most of them perhaps given by people who are living or who have lived in the town, but many hundred and perhaps thousands of books have been given by generous people who have visited the town for a short time and have become interested in the villages, and have shown their generosity by sending many valuable books.

The Prentiss Library at Tuel Town.

There is another library that is not so well known as the other three that have been mentioned, and it is possible that there are many people in the town that know nothing about the Prentiss Library in the northern part of the town that is known as Tuel Town.

The first library in the town was founded by Henry E. Prentiss in the year 1884, and a liberal supply of well chosen books given, also a fund for a new supply of books to be added from time to time.

Arthur L. Mann Memorial Library, West Paris

He took a law book, which he studied evenings, and when he rested by the way. He was studying law at that time, for he had decided to become a lawyer rather than remain in the army. He remained at Mobile in the service of the army for two years, when he again walked the long distance home again.

In 1887 he began to practice law in Oldtown, Maine, and it is said that on the days that he attended court in Bangor he used to walk back and forth in the same day. He often walked from Bangor to Paris to visit his parents and relatives, usually taking two days for the trip, but once he did it in a day and a half, and at one time, inside of twenty-four hours he walked eighty miles.

His law practice brought him into contact with many lumbermen, both profitable that he had money to invest, which was done so wisely that he eventually became a very large owner of timber lands, that kept increasing in value, so that when he arrived at middle age, he was looked upon as one of the wealthy lumbermen of Bangor, where he lived at that time. He served the city of Bangor as mayor one or two terms, and also represented that district in the state legislature.

During the years of his prosperity he did not live as a wealthy man, but lived simply, and in the same way that he had always lived, when he had to work hard for the necessities of life. The town of Prentiss, Maine, was once owned by him, and still bears his name. He was very generous, not only with his relatives but to those about him and to all who needed help.

The library that he gave to his native town of Paris was given at about the time that he began to be known as a wealthy man. It was a free library to be used without charge by all the people in that neighborhood, and by any of the Prentiss relatives, but with certain restrictions as to the length of time that the books should be kept, and as to how the library should be cared for and managed. At that time there were large families on every farm, and Tuel Town was quite a different place than it is now. Every book was read and re-read and appreciated, by a great many people, who had no way of getting books in any other way, and the gift of the library had the effect that was desired by the generous giver, and many a gray haired man and woman can remember the delight of going to the place where these books were kept and selecting what they should carry home.

To-day there is an old cellar in a field in Tuel Town, sitting back from the road. The cellar has trees and bushes growing in and around it. Near-by is a graveyard in which there are many grave-stones, flat on the ground, and those that are buried beneath have no relatives to see that the stones are taken care of, or that the bushes shall be cut from the yard, and on nearly all of the graves the wild rose bushes and weeds have made an almost impassable jungle.

The old cellar marks the home of Henry Prentiss, and the old grave-stones, many of them on the ground, mark the burial places of the friends of his youthful days.

But the library still lives and is used and appreciated by the people of that neighborhood, and there is a movement on foot which may result in a more permanent home being made for the books that have served for the pleasure and education of so many people for so long a time, and which was the first library ever founded in the town of Paris.

"So when a good man dies, for years beyond the light he leaves behind him lies, along the paths of men."

New Motor Regulation

Driver of Motor Vehicle Must Give Warning of his Intention to Pass from the Rear

The legislature at its recent session passed important legislation which is now in effect. Several changes were made in the motor vehicle laws, some good, some bad and some indifferent. Among the first classification is that section of the revised laws which has to do with passing cars from the rear. Heretofore it has been largely a question of custom as to whether the driver of the driver ahead or not and also largely a question of courtesy as to whether the driver of the car ahead steps on the gas, legs the road or pulls over to his own side, allowing the approaching car to pass.

Paragraph (a) of the amended section provides that the driver of any vehicle overtaking another proceeding in the same direction shall pass at a safe distance to the left and shall not again drive to the right until safely clear of the overtaken vehicle.

The law also provides that the overtaking vehicle shall not pass at a safe distance to the right and shall not again drive to the left until safely clear of the overtaken vehicle.

The legislature has also attempted to regulate the parking of vehicles on the main highway. It has not been quite successful in this, for it still leaves a good deal to a "question of fact". This provision is that no vehicle shall be left stationary on the paved or improved or main travelled portion of the highway, outside of the business district and so accessible to leave the vehicle on the highway. That last clause makes the law a little difficult of enforcement. The provision relative to parking on a highway or just over the brow of a hill is not so definite, for it stipulates that there must be a clear and unobstructed view of the parked vehicle for a distance of at least 300 feet.

Costing down a grade with the clutch thrown out, or the gears in neutral, is also declared to be illegal, under this new law.

Laterally speaking there is no longer any speed limit, in the open country, although the driver who is making over 30 miles an hour finds the burden of proof on him to show that he is not driving recklessly, if he happens to get into any argument with a traffic officer.—Bridgton News.
